

Girl, Stolen
By APRIL HENRY

Chapter 1

A Thousand Things Wrong

Cheyenne heard the car door open. She didn't move from where she lay curled on the back seat, her head resting on her bent arm. Despite the blanket that covered her, Cheyenne was shivering.

She had begged her step-mom to leave the keys in the car so she could turn on the radio if she got bored. After some back-and-forthing, Danielle had agreed. That had only been five minutes ago, and here she was, already back. Maybe the doctor had phoned in the prescription and Danielle hadn't had to wait for it to be filled.

Now the door slammed closed, the SUV rocking a little as weight settled into the driver's seat. The engine started. The emergency brake clunked as it was let off. The car jerked into reverse.

It was a thousand little things that told Cheyenne something was wrong. Even the way the door closed hadn't sounded right. Too fast and too hard for Danielle. The breathing was all wrong too, speeded up and harsh. Cheyenne sniffed. The smell of cigarettes. But Danielle didn't smoke, and as a nurse, couldn't stand anyone who did.

And suddenly Cheyenne knew that there was no way the person driving the car was her step-mom.

But why would someone else have gotten in the car? It was a Cadillac Escalade, so it wasn't like someone had just gotten confused and thought it was their car.

Then she remembered the keys. Somebody was stealing the car!

And Cheyenne was pretty sure they didn't know she was in it.

She froze, wondering how much the blanket covered her. She couldn't feel it on the top of her head. But maybe whoever was in the driver's seat hadn't seen her yet.

Cheyenne felt like a mouse she had seen in the kitchen one time when she turned on the light before school. Caught in the middle of the floor, it had stood stock still. Like maybe she wouldn't notice it if it didn't move.

But it hadn't worked for the mouse and now it didn't work for Cheyenne. She must have made some small sound. Or maybe the thief had looked back to see if someone was following and then realized what the shape was underneath the blanket.

A swear word. A guy's voice. She had already halfway known that it was a guy, the way she sometimes just knew things now.

"Who the hell are you?" His voice broke in surprise.

"What are you doing in Danielle's car?"

Their words collided and tangled with each other. Both of them speaking too fast, almost yelling.

Sitting up, she scrambled back against the passenger door, the one farthest from him.

"Stop our car and get out!"

"No!" he shouted back. The engine surged as he drove faster.

Cheyenne realized she was being kidnapped.

But she couldn't see the guy who was kidnapping her or where they were going.

Because for the last three years, Cheyenne had been blind.